A defendant's initial decision to tender a lesser included offense instruction in a voluntary manslaughter case does not render the earlier verdict "meaningless". "In fact, the earlier verdict is part of the evidence that the jury considers in determining whether the evidence is sufficient to establish a voluntary manslaughter defense." The initial decision to tender such an instruction is not a nullity. (Id., at p. 859.) Q: How to recognize mouse position at run time in WinForms? Here is my problem. I'm using Visual Studio to develop WinForms application. I need to save or notify which button the mouse pointer is hovering at run time. I can use MousePosition as follows. But it doesn't work to the scenario like Windows in the below image. In this case, the application will see the button's state is pressed if there is any button to interact with. (Is there a workaround for this scenario?) private void Form1_MouseMove(object sender, MouseEventArgs e) { Button button = (Button)sender; if (button != null) { ButtonState = button.State; } } I need the solution in general, rather than just the code above. Please help me. A: The mouse position may not be
