The use of enzymes as biological catalysts in organic media is of increasing importance. The use of perfluorocarbons as aqueous solvents to support these enzymes is reviewed. The most useful perfluorocarbon emulsions have emulsification properties and the ability to dissolve organic solvents in high concentrations. The question as to whether enzymes could function in such media is investigated. The bulk of the work deals with reactions using free enzymes. Several functions of enzymes immobilized in emulsions are described. We found that reactions such as cross-metathesis, hydroformylation and hydro-dehalogenation did not, in general, occur efficiently on substrates containing perfluorocarbons. Two such reactions were, however, carried out: catalytic oxidation of isobutane to 1-butanol with H<sub>2</sub>O<sub>2</sub> and catalytic polymerization of acrylic acid. Immobilized enzymes can, when correctly immobilized, show enhanced stability and catalytic performance when compared to the free enzyme, and can be recovered and reused.Re: Sizzlin' Sizzle You had me at Bill's Re: Sizzlin' Sizzle Wed May 27, 2012 7:24 pm ClareKuehn wrote:We just have to go along on the dotted line "understanding that we are all in agreement, Steve" I don't know how you manage all these differences, yours and mine.
